

- They source and transport raw insect biomass across borders
- They ensure quality standards, verify certifications, and facilitate customs clearance

- They set and enforce safety, environmental and market rules
- They verify compliance with food safety standards, environmental regulations, and labelling requirements

- They handle transport of products and maintain their quality during transit
- They track transport conditions and ensure safe delivery

- They use the insect meal as animal feed
- They want to ensure high-quality and sustainable meal

- They rear insects and initiate the supply chain
- They need to track production conditions, insects origin, and nutritional values

- They process the insects into insect meal
- They need to document processing methods, ensure quality control, safety

- They process the insect protein into animal feed
- They need to track nutritional profile & lab details for transparency on quality, safety, and verify that the final product adheres to standards

- They sell to the end users
- They need to ensure the traceability, safety, and meets consumer expectation for sustainability and nutritional content